

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

DENNIS KING and TRICIA KING, husband and wife,

Plaintiffs,

v.

GARFIELD COUNTY PUBLIC
HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO. 1, a municipal corporation, et al.,

Defendant.

NO: 12-CV-0622-TOR

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

BEFORE THE COURT is Defendants Garfield County Public Hospital District No. 1, Susan Morrow, Andrew Craigie, and Michele Beehler's Motion for Reconsideration (ECF No.102). This matter was submitted for consideration without oral argument and according to the Court's scheduling order, ECF No. 15 at 7, without a response from Plaintiff. The Court has reviewed the briefing and the record and files herein, and is fully informed.

BACKGROUND

This case concerns a hospital employee's termination for alleged drug diversion and use after the employee tested positive in a drug test. Plaintiff Dennis King sued his former employer, Garfield County Hospital District No. 1 and hospital employees (collectively, "GCHD"), as well as a company and physician allegedly involved in the drug test. The Court granted in part and denied in part GCHD's motion for summary judgment. In the motion now before the Court GCHD seeks reconsideration of the Court's denial of its request for summary judgment on Plaintiff's Fourteenth Amendment due process violation and its request for summary judgment on the issue of qualified immunity for hospital officials.

DISCUSSION

A motion for reconsideration may be reviewed under either Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59(e) (motion to alter or amend a judgment) or Rule 60(b) (relief from judgment). Sch. Dist. No. 1J v. ACandS, Inc., 5 F.3d 1255, 1262 (9th Cir. 1993). Under Rule 59(e), "[r]econsideration is appropriate if the district court (1) is presented with newly discovered evidence, (2) committed clear error or the initial decision was manifestly unjust, or (3) if there is an intervening change in controlling law." Id. at 1263; United Nat. Ins. Co. v. Spectrum Worldwide, Inc., 555 F.3d 772, 780 (9th Cir. 2009). Rule 60(b) allows a district judge to provide

1 relief from a final judgment if the moving party can show

2 (1) mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; (2) newly 3 discovered evidence that, with reasonable diligence, could not have been 4 discovered in time to move for a new trial under Rule 59(b); (3) fraud ..., 5 misrepresentation, or misconduct by an opposing party; (4) the judgment is 6 void; (5) the judgment has been satisfied, released, or discharged; it is based 7 on an earlier judgment that has been reversed or vacated; or applying it 8 prospectively is no longer equitable; or (6) any other reason that justifies 9 relief.

10 Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 60(b). Whether to grant a motion for reconsideration is within 11 the sound discretion of the court. Navajo Nation v. Confederated Tribes and 12 Bands of the Yakama Indian Nation, 331 F.3d 1041, 1046 (9th Cir. 2003). The 13 Ninth Circuit has held that

14 A district court does not abuse its discretion when it disregards legal 15 arguments made for the first time on a motion to amend, and a party that 16 fails to introduce facts in a motion or opposition cannot introduce them later 17 in a motion to amend by claiming that they constitute “newly discovered 18 evidence” unless they were previously unavailable.

19 Zimmerman v. City of Oakland, 255 F.3d 734, 740 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal 20 citations omitted). Reconsideration is also properly denied when a litigant “present[s] no arguments in his motion for [reconsideration] that had not already been raised in opposition to summary judgment.” Taylor v. Knapp, 871 F.2d 803, 805 (9th Cir. 1989).

1       A. Deprivation of a Tangible Interest

2       Defendant first requests reconsideration of the Court’s ruling that due 3 process protections are triggered when an employer makes a charge of dishonesty 4 or attaches stigma to an employment decision, arguing that because there is no 5 “stigma-plus” here, King’s due process claim should be dismissed. ECF No. 102 at 6 3.

7       The Court declines to reconsider its ruling because GCHD again misstates
8 the legal standard. As clearly stated in the Order Re: Pending Motions, ECF NO.
9 101 at 23, in the public-employment context an employee may claim the right to a 10 name-clearing hearing if “1) the accuracy of the charge is contested; 2) there is 11 some public disclosure of the charge; and 3) it is made in connection with the 12 termination of employment or the alteration of some right or status recognized by 13 law.” Llamas v. Butte Cmty. Coll. Dist., 238 F.3d 1123, 1129 (9th Cir. 2001).
14 Defendant argues that something more than defamation by a state official must be 15 involved to establish a due process claim—“stigma-plus,” citing Paul v. Davis, 424 16 U.S. 693 (1976). The stigma-plus requirement is appropriate in situations like that 17 in Paul, which involved police officials’ distribution of a flyer stating that plaintiff 18 had shoplifted. But as the Paul court went on to explain, citing public employment, 19 “it was not thought sufficient to establish a claim under § 1983 and the Fourteenth 20 Amendment that there simply be defamation by a state official; the defamation had

1 to occur in the course of termination of employment.” Id. at 710 (citing Board of 2 Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564 (1972) (“[The State] did not base the nonrenewal of 3 [Plaintiff’s] contract on a charge, for example, that he had been guilty of 4 dishonesty or immorality. Had it done so, this would be a different case. For 5 ‘(w)here a person’s good name, reputation, honor, or integrity is at stake because 6 of what the government is doing to him, notice and an opportunity to be heard are 7 essential.’ In such a case, due process would accord an opportunity to refute the 8 charge....”). Thus, the standard for public employment is defamation plus the 9 requirement that the defamation occur in the course of termination. There is no 10 question that King was terminated; thus, contrary to GCHD’s argument, there is 11 “stigma plus.”

12 B. The Three-Prong Test

13 Defendant next requests reconsideration of the determination that the three 14 defamatory events considered (1) were publicly disclosed, (2) were false, or (3) 15 occurred in the course of termination, as required. ECF No. 102 at 4. Defendant 16 argues (1) that the termination letter was not publicly disclosed, and that it was not 17 substantially false, (2) that the statement in the NCQAC complaint was not false, 18 and (3) that the Tuvey letter was too temporally attenuated to qualify for 19 consideration. The Court addresses each contention in turn.

20 ///

1       The termination letter. Defendant argues that the undisputed evidence 2 shows that documents related to King’s positive test results were maintained in 3 confidential files at GCHD. ECF No. 102 at 7. Defendant appears to contend that 4 the letter was not published in satisfaction of the first prong of the three-prong test 5 enumerated above. Id.

6       The Court disagrees. As discussed in the Court’s order on GCHD’s motion 7 for summary judgment, GCHD is a public employer, subject to the Washington 8 Public Records Act (“PRA”), RCW 42.56, et seq. See Progressive Animal Welfare
9 Soc. v. Univ. of Washington, 125 Wash. 2d 243, 250 (1994) (the act requires all 10 state and local agencies to disclose any public record upon request). “Washington’s 11 public records act...is a strongly worded mandate for broad disclosure of public 12 records.” Limstrom v. Ladenburg, 136 Wash. 2d 595, 603 (1998). Under the PRA, 13 “[e]ach agency, in accordance with published rules, shall make available for public 14 inspection and copying all public records, unless the record falls within” an 15 exemption. RCW 42.56.070. As the Court stated in its order, the Ninth Circuit 16 makes clear that “absent expungement, placement of stigmatizing information in 17 an employee’s personnel file constitutes publication when the governing state law 18 classifies an employee’s personnel file as a public record.” Cox v. Roskelley, 359 19 F.3d 1105, 1112 (9th Cir. 2004). The Washington PRA provides for the disclosure 20 of such personnel files. Cox v. Roskelley, 359 F.3d at 1111.

1 Defendant contends that because in Cox v. Roskelley the parties agreed that 2 the letter was public record under Washington law, the case is distinguishable.
3 GCHD also cites—without explanation as to how they apply—RCW 42.56.050, 4 .230(3), and .360 for its contention that the termination letter is not subject to 5 public disclosure. The Court finds these arguments unpersuasive. RCW 42.56.230 6 provides a disclosure exemption for “[p]ersonal information in files maintained for 7 employees, appointees, or elected officials of any public agency to the extent that 8 disclosure would violate their right to privacy....” RCW 42.56.230 (provision 9 unaltered by enacted legislation WA LEGIS 142 (2014), 2014 Wash. Legis. Serv.
10 Ch. 142 (S.B. 6522)). The PRA’s privacy provisions state:

11 A person's “right to privacy,” “right of privacy,” “privacy,” or “personal 12 privacy,” as these terms are used in this chapter, is invaded or violated only 13 if disclosure of information about the person: (1) Would be highly offensive 14 to a reasonable person, and (2) is not of legitimate concern to the public.

14 RCW 42.56.050 (emphasis added).<sup>1</sup> Thus, in order for personal information in 15 employee files to be exempt from disclosure, it must “violate their right to

---

16 <sup>1</sup> As for the last PRA provision GCHD cites, RCW 42.56.360—including any 17 amendments reflected in enacted legislation recorded at 2014 Wash. Legis. Serv.
18 Ch. 223 (S.S.H.B. 2572)—contains provisions regarding the disclosure of health 19 care information; the connection to the instant case is unclear, and GCHD has 20 made no effort to explain it.

1 privacy.” See RCW 42.56.230. To violate an employee’s right to privacy, 2 disclosure of information must not only be “highly offensive to a reasonable 3 person,” it must also be “not of legitimate concern to the public.” See RCW 4 42.56.050. Here, disclosure of termination due to a positive drug test is certainly 5 “highly offensive to a reasonable person,” but it is also certainly of legitimate 6 concern to the public, where the employee is a nurse—with access to narcotics—in 7 a public hospital. Thus, in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff—as the 8 summary judgment standard requires—the termination letter is not subject to the 9 PRA’s exclusion and, under Cox v. Roskelley, is published for the purposes of 10 triggering a name-clearing hearing.

11 GCHD also contends that the letter does not meet the falsity requirement.
12 ECF No. 102 at 8. The Court disagrees. The termination letter states that King was 13 terminated for “failure to comply with Section 3.16 of the employee handbook 14 Substance Abuse and Testing” and that the “reasonable suspicion test that was 15 performed on 2/11/11 was found to have positive test results for Opiates of 16 Codeine and Morphine.” ECF No. 73-25 at 2. GCHD contends that King was 17 terminated because he tested positive for opiates, in violation of the handbook 18 provision; thus, nothing in the letter is false. While King does not dispute that his 19 test was positive, he does dispute that his positive test result is due to his 20 misconduct, which the letter certainly implies by its reference to his violation of

1 the handbook provisions and “reasonable suspicion test.” Accordingly, in the light 2 most favorable to the Plaintiff, the accuracy of the charge is contested, and 3 Defendant has failed to demonstrate that the Court manifestly erred on this issue.

4 Defendant also argues that the Court’s determination that qualified immunity 5 should be denied because the termination letter was placed in King’s file was 6 manifest error, or at minimum presents a question of law under Washington’s 7 Public Records Act. ECF No. 102 at 7. This was precisely the issue and 8 Washington statute addressed in Cox v. Roskelley, in which the Ninth Circuit 9 affirmed the district court’s denial of qualified immunity, holding “that the 10 contours of the right to a name-clearing hearing upon placement of stigmatizing 11 material in a personnel file were clearly established, such that a reasonable official 12 in these defendants’ position would have known that his conduct was unlawful.” 13 359 F.3d at 1113. Accordingly, this argument fails as well.

14 The NCQAC Complaint. Defendant contends that Court erred in finding 15 that the true statements giving rise to a negative inference can trigger due-process 16 rights. ECF No. 102 at 4.

17 As explained in the Court’s order on GCHD’s motion for summary
18 judgment, the accuracy of the charge must be contested. Llamas., 238 F.3d at 1129.
19 “If the hearing mandated by the Due Process Clause is to serve any useful purpose, 20 there must be some factual dispute between an employer and a discharged

1 employee which has some significant bearing on the employee's reputation.” Codd
2 v. Velger, 429 U.S. 624, 627 (1977).

3 Defendant argues that the fact that each individual statement in the NCQAC 4 complaint was true forecloses King from using the complaint as a basis for seeking 5 a name-clearing hearing. ECF No. 102 at 4. GCHD reported to the Nursing Care 6 Quality Alliance that the long-term care nurses were tested “for reasonable 7 suspicion of narcotic diversion related to incorrect narcotic count,” and that King’s 8 test results were positive, though GCHD was “[u]nable to prove actual patient 9 diversion.” ECF No. 73-27 at 3. The form also specifies that King was terminated.

10 Id. The Court reiterates that while the very brief statements contained in the 11 NCQAC complaint are not necessarily individually contested, they create a strong 12 inference that King was terminated as a result of the positive test results and 13 suspected diversion, particularly since there is no other suggestion of why he was 14 terminated. Furthermore, the factual dispute turns on a very fine distinction: King 15 does not dispute that he took a prescription medication that may have resulted in a 16 positive test for opiates, but he does dispute that his positive test result should be 17 imputed to drug diversion or another improper source. Thus, King does dispute the 18 “substantial truth” of the clear inference of the statements. In the light most 19 favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court must decline to reconsider its denial of summary 20 judgment on this issue.

1       The Tuvey Letter. GCHD contends that the Court erred in finding that that 2 hospital administrator Dale Tuvey's letter in support of GCHD's position in King' 3 unemployment benefits hearing was not too attenuated to meet the temporal nexus 4 requirement. ECF No. 102 at 8.

5       "[T]here must be some temporal nexus between the employer's statements 6 and the termination. Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479, 1483 (9th 7 Cir.1996). The Campanelli court refused, however, to adopt a bright line rule "that 8 defamatory statements made by an employer any time after the date of termination 9 are not made 'in the course of the termination.' " Id. at 1482. Instead, the court 10 held that the statements must be "so closely related to discharge from employment 11 that the discharge itself may become stigmatizing in the public eye." Id.

12       GCHD cites several cases for the proposition that four months is too 13 attenuated; the Court finds these cases unpersuasive. See Tibbetts v. Kulongoski, 14 567 F.3d 529, 536 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding that defendant should be granted 15 qualified immunity because at the time the stigmatizing press release issued, a 16 reasonable person in defendant's position "could not have known by recourse to 17 then-extant case law whether a stigmatizing statement made nineteen days after 18 Plaintiffs' termination would violate Campanelli's 'temporal nexus' test."); Bishop 19 v. Wood, 426 U.S. 341, 348-49 (1976) ("the asserted reasons for the City 20 Manager's decision ... were stated in writing in answer to interrogatories after this

1 litigation commenced.... [S]ince the latter communication was made in the course 2 of a judicial proceeding which did not commence until after petitioner had suffered 3 the injury for which he seeks redress, it surely cannot provide retroactive support 4 for his claim. A contrary evaluation of either explanation would penalize forthright 5 and truthful communication ... between litigants....”). Here, the question is not—6 as it was in Tibbetts—whether the right to a name clearing hearing is clearly 7 established by a press release issued 19 days after termination. Nor is a statement 8 during the course of an unemployment hearing the same as answers to 9 interrogatories in litigation over the very issue before the court.

10 Nor has Ninth Circuit foreclosed the possibility that stigmatizing statements 11 could occur after termination. See Campanelli, 100 F.3d at 1483. Thus, the out-of-12 circuit cases Defendant cites in support of that proposition are likewise 13 unpersuasive. See, e.g., Albamonte v. Bickley, 573 F. Supp. 77, 81 (N.D. Ill. 1983); 14 Gentile v. Wallen, 562 F.2d 193, 197-98 (2d Cir. 1977). Accordingly, Defendant 15 has not demonstrated that the Court erred in finding that, under Campanelli, four 16 months was not too attenuated under the facts of this case. At this stage of the 17 proceeding, the Court must look at the evidence in the light most favorable to the 18 Plaintiff.

C. Adequacy of the Pre-Termination Hearing

Defendants argue that the Court erred in concluding that the February 22, 2011, pre-termination meeting GCHD had with King did not satisfy due process requirements for a name clearing hearing. ECF No. 102 at 11. GCHD contends that though Dr. McGee did not issue its final determination until March 24, 2011, King had been informed that his test results showed an unacceptable level of opiates and that his continued employment depended on the final laboratory results and interpretation by Dr. McGee. Id. at 12. GCHD also argues that the name-clearing hearing need not take place after the damaging statements were made. Id.

These arguments are unpersuasive. As the Court already noted in its order on GCHD's motion for summary judgment,

While King had notice that his urine drug screen would be discussed, he did not have the results from his drug test. As Plaintiffs correctly contend, without his test results, King could not adequately address the potential seriousness of the findings. Nor had GCHD at the time of the meeting made the damaging statements that form the basis for King's need to clear his name. Without these, King certainly could not have had an opportunity to clear his name.

ECF No. 101 at 33-34 (internal citations omitted). Defendants admit that Dr. McGee had not yet made his final determination at the time of the meeting, and that such a determination would form the basis of their decision. See ECF No. 102 at 11-12. Without the results or the decision based on the results, the

1 pretermination meeting offered no meaningful opportunity for King to clear his 2 name, and due process requirements were not satisfied.

3 D. Adequacy of the Post-Termination Procedures

4 Next, Defendants contend the Court erred by stating that no post-termination 5 procedure was available to King. Defendants cite to the grievance procedure in the 6 employees' handbook, ECF No. 66-1 at 22-23, and a series of emails to and from 7 Mr. Craigie and Plaintiff. However, neither the grievance procedure policy nor the 8 emails reference their applicability to a name clearing hearing.

9 Defendants misunderstand that the burden is on the government to "provide 10 the person an opportunity to clear his name" with notice of the evidence adduced 11 against him "at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner." See Court's 12 Order, ECF No. 101 at 35 (citing Vanelli v. Reynolds Sch. Dist. No. 7.).

13 Furthermore, "[e]ven though a post-termination hearing provides one with 14 an opportunity to clear his name, as well as to regain any improperly withheld 15 benefits, compensable damages may arise for mental and emotional distress arising 16 from the initial denial of due process. Vanelli v. Reynolds School Dist. No. 7, 667
17 F.2d 773, 779 n.8 (9th Cir. 1982). This is not something unusual to the Ninth 18 Circuit. See Buxton v. City of Plant City, Fla., 871 F.2d 1037, 1046 (11th Cir.
19 1989) ("We hold that a public employer is required to provide the opportunity for a 20 post-termination name-clearing hearing when stigmatizing information is made

1 part of the public records, or otherwise published. Notice of the right to such a 2 hearing is required.”).

3 ACCORDINGLY, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

4 Defendant GCHD’s Motion for Reconsideration (ECF No. 102) is
